Time for Changes

WHEN THIS WAS WRITTEN, it was expected fast-talking Chester Bowles was going to lose his job as undersecretary of state despite official denials.

Mr. Bowles and the administration did not see eye to eye on the invasion of Cuba. And Mr. Bowles long has said that the question of admitting Red China to the UN must be faced.

If Mr. Bowles goes, it won't be the first time he has been a controversial figure.

Mr. Bowles is inclined to speak his piece with both vigor and frankness and if Mr. Kennedy is annoyed at his undersecretary of state, we are quite sure Mr. Kennedy will not remain annoyed.

Many are surprised that Allen Dulles has remained around as long as he has as director of the CIA. It was understood when the new administration took over that Mr. Dulles was only keeping the CIA seat warm until the president choose a successor.

Two years from today we'll wager the original Kennedy team won't have much of its original look.
